

Coronavirus COVID-19

Support for you
in and around the St Ives area

St Ives Town Council
Issue 1: April 2nd 2020

The coronavirus outbreak is a huge challenge for everybody in our community.

The Government have issued restrictions on our daily lives. They have asked us to not to leave our homes unless we absolutely have to – so only to exercise, or to buy vital food or medicines - and to avoid social contact if we do.

These restrictions are absolutely essential to slow the spread of this virus and allow our healthcare services to deal with it better. They are particularly important to protect those over the age of 70 years; those who have health conditions such as chronic heart or kidney disease, a weakened immune system or diabetes; and those who are pregnant. However, they are there to keep everyone in the country as safe and healthy as possible.

This is a difficult and worrying time. However, here in St Ives, we are very lucky to have many organisations to support you – with everything from basic information about protecting yourselves from the virus and looking after your mental health; to practical help with shopping for food and medicines, or giving you someone to talk to.

This includes the local councils and NHS, but also our volunteer organisations, charities and churches. St Ives Town Council has put together a list of these contacts in this leaflet.

Please use them – while we wait for this crisis to pass, these organisations are still active and available to support you.

COVID-19 Co-ordination Hub

As you may know, a Cambridgeshire Covid-19 Coordination Hub

<https://www.cambridgeshire.gov.uk/residents/coronavirus/covid-19-coordination-hub-your-community-needs-you> has been created, supported by Huntingdonshire District Council Local Hub as part of the efforts to tackle the current crisis. These hubs are focused on ensuring critical public services, and the most vulnerable residents, receive the support they need.

<https://www.wearehuntingdonshire.org/>

They contain a large amount of vital information about the current crisis for everyone in the area. Please look at these.

Requests for help

The Hub network is working hard to identify those people who need help and support – for example, those who need to self-isolate, those who are vulnerable or excluded, and those who are worried about their wellbeing. The two hubs will also receive data direct from NHS England about the people who need to be ‘shielded’ from the virus for 12 weeks because of their significant health issues.

The hubs also want to receive direct contact from anybody across Cambridgeshire who needs support; and referrals from you about anyone else in your local community you believe needs help.

Offers of help

If you are not in an ‘at risk’ group and wish to offer support and assistance to those that are, please register on the hub so that volunteers and those in need can be linked up to ensure no-one is missed. At the time of writing, more than 1,000 people in Cambridgeshire have registered to help.

Supporting

Staying at home for long periods of time can be tough going, so it's now more important than ever to look after your mental health.

When a crisis happens, we often start behaving differently, often without realising it. You could find yourself arguing more, talking faster, having trouble sleeping, or feeling compelled to check news websites every few minutes. You could feel tired or sick, have stomach problems, palpitations or headaches. These are just a few possible effects on your mind of feeling anxious and out of control – whether you realise that's what is going on or not.

If you are feeling like this, or just generally out of sorts, you are definitely not alone; these are normal reactions when your your mental health

brain perceives a threat. Meanwhile, we have been asked to stay in and do very little, when our minds are desperate to do something about what's going on. This can be stressful and make us anxious.

Many, many people are going through this at the moment, so here are some quick tips to manage anxiety in a crisis:

1. Breathe. This may seem basic, but a breathing exercise can work magic. Control your breathing and you control the flow of adrenaline and cortisol (the stress hormone) in your body.

A simple breathing exercise is:

- Breathe in through your nose and out through your mouth. Slowly
- Make the out breath longer than the in breath
- Breathe from your tummy not your chest. Make your stomach fill as you breathe in
- Do this for two minutes – and see how you feel

2. Phone a friend. Don't suffer alone. Call a friend or family member – or one of the numbers in our lists. You will feel better once you've talked to someone. And, at this time in particular people really want to talk to you and help.

3. Laugh. It doesn't matter at what. Jokes, YouTube videos, stand up comedy. This will release endorphins and make you feel better, less alone and happier.

4. Do something with your hands.

Keeping your hands busy with activities such as cooking, drawing or gardening is incredibly calming.

5. Treat your body. We hold stress in our bodies as well as our minds. Have a bath or shower. Wear things that make you feel comfortable. Stretch. Dance. Eat delicious, healthy food. All of these will make you feel calmer.

6. Get out in the sun. When the weather is good, get out in the garden, stand outside your door or open your windows to let it in. Or go for a walk (remembering to social distance while you do).

7. Limit the news. Don't read too much about the crisis, particularly on social media. When you do, stick to sensible sources, such as the NHS and BBC.

8. Practice wellness. Don't drink too much or take drugs. Go to bed at a decent time, get some exercise and, again, don't read too much news.

9. Be kind. To yourself and others.
